Tekst 1

- 1p 1 Waarom mocht de familie Beckham een privébezoek brengen aan Chester Zoo?

ZOO chiefs today defended a decision to leave paying visitors out in the rain while David and Victoria Beckham had a private view.

The star took his wife and sons to Chester Zoo. But when officials closed the elephant, giraffe and chimpanzee houses for the Beckhams, visitors were said to be annoyed at having to stand outside.

A zoo spokesman admitted some members of the public complained but added: "The Beckhams were our special guests and we wanted to give them some privacy. The poor things are hunted down by the paparazzi all the time."

Tekst 2

The cat that turned pink

A couple are amazed by how their white cat Brumas turned pink during a morning walk. His owners Philip Worth and his wife, Joan, took the cat to their vet who said he was in good health.

Mr. Worth said: "He went out snow white but came back Barbie pink. We went to the vet, but she couldn't find any reason for it. She decided it wasn't toxic, which was what I was worried about." She said she didn't believe paint was the cause as Brumas' fur was still soft. "It occurred to me that it could have been wet paint, but there is no way he could have got the same colour so evenly all over."

The couple, who adopted Brumas after he was found and taken in by the Cats Protection League, have five other cats but none of them has been affected in the same way. Mrs. Worth added: "We're quite happy with him as a pink cat. We love him whatever his colour is."

1p 2 Wat is er gebeurd met de kat Brumas?

- A Hij is door onbekenden met roze verf bespoten.
- B Zijn vacht is op onverklaarbare wijze roze geworden.
- C Zijn vacht werd roze door het eten van iets giftigs.

1p 3 Wat zegt mevrouw Worth nu over haar kat Brumas?

- A Ze heeft geprobeerd zijn vacht weer wit te krijgen.
- B Ze is nog steeds gek op haar kat.
- C Ze wil hem terugbrengen naar het asiel.

WHAT I WAS LIKE IN HIGH SCHOOL

Actress GWYNETH PALTROW

- 1 I went to Spence, an all-girls private school in New York City. For years I had to wear a uniform. I had two grey skirts – a kilt and an A-line. Of course I rolled them up, but you could not change the boring colour.
- 2 On top of that, I was skinny and had braces for my teeth and a bad hair-cut. My mother would always tell me how beautiful I was, but I wasn't. I was uncertain all the time and boys didn't like me.
- 3 There was this one girl Lisa who did terrible things to me. She was the head of the class. Sometimes we would be friends and sometimes she would be like, "I have the power over you". She used to get other classmates to call me and tell me the popular boys (from other schools) wanted to go out with me. But it was all a lie.
- 4 In my school literature was important. After I read Crime and Punishment, my favorite book, I became obsessed about whether I was a 'good person'. Like I would lie to my parents and tell them I went to the movies when I was really at some party. Then when they asked me about the movie, I'd be like, "Oh, it was really good!" Meanwhile, inside, I was thinking, Oh my, I'm a terrible person!

A Ze regelde vaak afspraakjes met leuke jongens voor Gwyneth.
B Ze stookte soms andere klasgenoten op om Gwyneth voor de gek te houden.
C Ze werd uiteindelijk Gwyneths beste vriendin.
- 1p 7 Op school las Gwyneth het boek Crime and Punishment.
Welke invloed had het boek op haar, volgens alinea 4?
A Ze ging daardoor allerlei slechte dingen doen die helemaal niet mochten.
B Ze hield zich daardoor aan de regels die haar ouders gesteld hadden.
C Ze vond het daardoor vervelend om tegen haar ouders te liegen.

Bumper carts

I was grocery shopping with my mom and got stuck pushing the cart. I guess I wasn't paying attention because I steered it right into a really cute boy who was bending over to stock the oranges! I was too embarrassed to say anything, so I just abandoned the cart and ran.

I was a teenmum – to a lion!

When a lion cub<sup>1)</sup> was not accepted by its mother, 19-year-old Kate stepped in to lend a hand...

1 My love for animals began eight years ago, when I got a Saturday job at Dartmoor Wildlife Park. When I reached 16, I was sure I wanted to work with wildlife and went to college to do a National Diploma in Animal Care. After my studies, the Wildlife Park took me on full-time. I was thrilled!

2 Floyd

My favourite animals were wild cats like pumas, jaguars, tigers and lions. On August 25 last year, Peggy, a lioness I was looking after, gave birth to three cubs. She didn't look after them and two of them died. There was only one cub left, which was named Floyd. He came to live with me because I had an apartment in the park. At first, he had to be bottle-fed, every two hours – day and night. I had to set my alarm to go off regularly, dragging myself out of bed no matter what time it was. After two weeks, I was feeling like a zombie.

3 More attention

Floyd needed more attention than a baby. If I turned my back, he would be eating the carpet or chewing on shoes! And because lions like to have their own territories, Floyd thought that things like my slippers were his property, not mine. Floyd's claws! Looking after Floyd meant I had no social life any more! I couldn't go out, and because I was so tired, I was often unreasonable to my boyfriend.

4 Leaving him

When I adopted Floyd, I could fit him in my hand, but after three months he was the size of a very big dog. I'd grown very close to him, so when he had to go back to his own area in the park, I was really upset, because he was attached to me too. Whenever I went to visit him, he'd rub his face against mine. It was heartbreaking.

5 Amazing experience

When Floyd left Dartmoor last July to go to another wildlife park, he weighed almost 70 kilos! I was sad to see him go, but I also felt proud of the job I'd done: raising him to be so fit and healthy. If I saw him now, I think he'd still recognise me, but I know it might upset us both if I visited him, so I don't. Even so, being a cub's mum for a year was an amazing experience and I'd do it again for sure!

One of the adverts shows a giant blob of Marmite that some people run away from while others run towards it and leap in.
- 2 The company that makes Marmite said they'd take the ads off programmes for young kids, but that wasn't enough. The Advertising Standards Agency decided instead to stop the ads being shown during all children's television.
- 3 A different consumer organisation that checks adverts before they're shown, didn't have a problem with the ads, saying they showed "very mild horror" and were designed to make people laugh.

A police spokeswoman said: "It is believed the badger entered the house via a cat flap in the kitchen door and made its way up the stairs to a bedroom." Once there, it tried to jump through the window, causing the window to smash, and injuring itself.

Bottom burping keeps fish talking

We all know fish can't speak to each other underwater, but some of them seem to be keeping in touch by farting<sup>1)</sup>. Scientist Dr Bob Batty spotted a group of herrings swallowing air and then releasing it from a small hole near their tail. He said: "Releasing these little bubbles ... the fish only do this in company - if they are alone they don't do it. They do it now and again and it increases, the more fish there are in a group."

Scientists also discovered that the release of bubbles could be helping the fish control how deep they're swimming or can even be used as a warning against natural enemies.

Dr Batty's publication has won a special prize called the Ig Nobel. This prize rewards science that makes people laugh.

Bike fears

- 1 Kent Police have insisted that they are tackling the problem of youths causing trouble when riding motorbikes, scooters and quad bikes. Their explanation follows the start of a campaign called 'Operation Inact' which is meant to deal with this problem. Member of Parliament Anne Jobson started it after she had 'numerous complaints' over the issue.
- 2 Anne also said that children had been spotted riding bikes without crash helmets on main roads. "There will be a serious accident unless something is done. Nobody wants to stop children having fun, but riding on the roads and pavements without a crash helmet is just plain dangerous.
I would ask that action is taken against parents who allow their children onto the public highway without a licence, insurance or crash helmet."
- 3 But the police say they are aware of the issue and have already taken steps to do something about it. Cathy Sigrist, spokeswoman for Kent Police, said 25 vehicles were seized in the last year and 42 offenders were given fines, as part of the new campaign. "We do have a scheme in Kent and we are constantly looking into the problem," she assured.
