WHY ME?

HORROR STORIES

The most embarrassing things always happen to you? Hey girl, you're not alone. Check out these readers' red-faced moments.

Bringing down the house

I had the lead in our school's musical. For one of the dance routines I had to leap from the top step of the stage to the second step. It wasn't that hard, considering I practiced it about 3.000 times. On the opening night, I guess I was nervous because I forgot where to put my feet. I missed the step and tumbled down the entire staircase! I was taken to the hospital, and the play was closed for the night.

FOOTBALL PLAYER DAVID BECKHAM AND SPICE GIRL VICTORIA FIRST MET BACK IN THE MID-90S AND THE GENERAL PUBLIC JUST CAN'T GET ENOUGH OF THEM. ANDY HAMMER, 24, AND CAMILLA SHADBOLT, 22, ARE THE UK'S NO.1 POSH AND BECKS LOOK-ALIKES. HERE THEY TALK ABOUT THE HIGHS AND LOWS OF DOUBLING THE COUPLE

1 So how did you two meet?

Camilla: I'd been dragged along to this fashion show party by a friend of mine five years ago. I saw Andy there on one of his early Beckham look-alike jobs. I thought he was gorgeous. He came over and started talking. He asked me out on a date and we hit it off straight away.

Andy: The night we met, I told her about my work as a look-alike. Camilla told me how people commented on how much she resembled Posh. I couldn't see it myself at the time, as she had much longer hair than Victoria. I just thought she was stunning.

2 How did you start working together?

Andy: As soon as we started dating, everyone would comment on how much we looked like David and Victoria. After a couple of months my stepmum put us in touch with this agent at 'A-List Lookalikes'. We had to send pictures of us dressed up as Posh and Becks and we got signed up. Work started to come in and within three months we were doing it full time. We'd do shop openings, turn on Christmas lights and appear at private parties. My fee was £500 for three hours and we were working most days. So I gave up my job and Camilla left college.

3 Do you get mistaken for the real thing?

Andy: Abroad we get mistaken for them all the time, but in the UK people tend to take a second glance and realise we're not them. You do feel bad sometimes when people are fooled. When we sign autographs we sign our own names, but try to make them similar to Posh and Becks'.

Camilla and Andy

4 Have you met Posh and Becks?

Camilla: I met Posh when I doubled for her in an advert and she was really nice. It took me ages to gather the courage to talk to her, but I went over to her and introduced myself as a look-alike. She asked me: 'Who for?'- as if she didn't know! She said she thought I was sweet and she kept smiling at me across the set and that eased my nerves.

Andy: Although I've doubled for David, either as his profile, hands or back of his head in several commercials, I've never met the man himself. I'd really like to chat with him, because I heard that I was on his most-hated list, for some reason. I'd like to ask him if that's true or not.

5 How do you keep up with the couple's changing looks?

Camilla: We buy celebrity magazines and make sure we're as up-to-date as we can be.

We can't afford identical designer outfits, so we look around for high street versions of what they wear. My fake tan costs a bomb too!

2p 3 Geef van elk van de volgende beweringen aan of ze juist of onjuist zijn, volgens alinea's 1 en 2.

Omcirkel 'juist' of 'onjuist' in de uitwerkbijlage.

- 1 Camilla ging naar het feest omdat ze hoopte Victoria Beckham te ontmoeten.
- 2 Andy werkte al als dubbelganger voordat hij Camilla ontmoette.
- 3 Een bureau dat dubbelgangers levert, vroeg Camilla en Andy als stel voor hen te werken.
- 4 Het werken als dubbelgangers werd al gauw een 'echte' baan voor Camilla en Andy.

1p 4 'Do you get mistaken for the real thing?' (alinea 3)
→ Wie of wat wordt bedoeld met 'the real thing'?

1p 5 Why did Victoria ask 'who for'? (paragraph 4)
A Victoria did not know who Camilla was looking for.
B Victoria pretended not to have noticed that Camilla looked like her.
C Victoria wanted to know which agency Camilla was working for.

1p 6 Why does Andy want to meet David Beckham? (paragraph 4)
A He has heard David would like to meet him.
B He is a great fan of David Beckham.
C He wants to find out if David dislikes him.
D He wants to see if he really looks like David Beckham.

1p 7 What do Andy and Camilla wear when they work as Beckham look-alikes? (paragraph 5)
A They borrow clothes from designers the Beckhams buy their clothes from.
B They buy less expensive copies of the clothes the Beckhams wear.
C They make their own clothes with the help of photos of the Beckhams.

Why only the lonely watch the ad breaks

TELEVISION ADVERTISEMENTS ARE A WASTE OF MONEY, RESEARCH CARRIED OUT BY THE LONDON BUSINESS SCHOOL SHOWS.

- 1 As soon as the commercial break comes on, the vast majority of us do something – anything – else. Women will do a spot of housework or pick up the phone rather than 'waste' time watching. Men are more likely to channel surf until the programme they've been watching comes back on. And many people keep a newspaper at hand to pick up during the breaks – reading half an article in one break and the other half in the next. The researchers found that very few people actually watch the commercials.
- 2 The research also found that the bigger the audience the less likely they are to watch the adverts. And when they do watch as a group, people are far more likely to ridicule the adverts than praise them. So expensive primetime slots¹⁾ could be the worst possible value for advertisers.
- 3 Hidden cameras and microphones were set up in eight households for a week. The subjects included a family, some singles, a retired couple, a single mother with two young children and a house shared by five office workers in their twenties. The couple used the ad break to catch up on what they had each done that day, while a single woman watched one-third of the breaks when she was alone, but far less when with friends.
- 4 Mark Ritson, who led the study, said it was a 'breathtaking example of ignorance and naivety' that advertisers presumed the bigger a show's audience the more people would watch during the break. Advertisers waste millions on primetime slots when they could get more exposure with cheaper slots aimed at 'a lonely, but more attentive viewer'.

noot 1 slots = vaste uitzendtijden

- 1p 8 Television advertisements are a waste of money (subtitle)
This conclusion is based on the fact that most viewers
A hardly ever buy the products they see during the commercial breaks.
B see the adverts just as a form of entertainment.
C use the breaks for other things rather than watching TV.
- 1p 9 Which of the households mentioned pay most attention to the ad breaks on television?
A family
B five office workers
C mother of two young children
D retired couple
E single woman
- 1p 10 What is the advice given to advertisers? (paragraph 4)
It is best to advertise
A at times when people watch TV on their own.
B before or after popular TV programmes.
C regularly during the evening.

DRUNK AND DISORDERLY

After a long day at work, I obviously wasn't paying attention as I walked to the bus stop. In my exhausted state I tripped over a paving stone and ended up sprawled on the pavement. It was the last straw after a tough day and I expected some kind soul to help me up, but instead I heard a man behind me say "She's probably drunk", as he stepped disdainfully over my legs. I couldn't help laughing.

A day in the life of ...a cycle trainer

LONDONERS know all about traffic and the problems involved. One way to beat it is to get on your bike, but that, in itself, poses problems: “Some 5 people are worried about cycling on London’s busy streets,” says Simeon Bamford, 27, who set up Cycle Training in July 2000. “But we can teach them how to use the roads
 10 safely and confidently. We can teach a riding style which enables people to make lots of space around themselves and communicate assertively with other road users to get to where they 15 are going swiftly.”

Bamford has always loved cycling and, although he learned to drive as a teenager, he has never owned a car. “I always cycled to school, at university 20 and I have always cycled to work in London.”

At work he checks his e-mails and phones his instructors with bookings. His job is split between running the 25 office and acting as an instructor. Cycle Training has 35 freelance instructors, male and female. Most are former couriers, students, actors or retired teachers and all are trained to 30 do bike repair and maintenance checks, covering things such as gears, brakes and wheels. Cycle Training runs individual and group courses (the latter usually in schools) covering 35 complete beginners to journey accompaniment (helping cyclists plan their best route to and from work).

With an estimated 160,000 regular cyclists in London and growing 40 concerns about traffic jams and pollution, he is increasingly kept busy running courses for local authorities, who have provided funding for training youngsters and staff, and running 45 courses at summer universities.

In the afternoons you will often find him pedalling off to supervise training in schools, mainly primary schools. “Once we’ve arranged things with the 50 head we’ll go into the school to give a talk to all the children in order to get them interested. We usually find that the kids know the reasons why it’s good to cycle. Most of them are really 55 into it. 15, a lot of kids end up not cycling because parents or teachers don’t let them. We can turn that around.”

In a period of four weeks children
 60 are taught to cycle safely and the training is made fun. “The kids often cycle for a mile. We will stop at junctions and practise manoeuvres and then ride on to another junction. They 65 really enjoy it because it’s different to normal lessons.” But what about very busy crossroads? “People tend to prefer cycling in side streets,” he admits. “But when you learn to cycle
 70 confidently you use all the main roads.”

Surprisingly, he is not a supporter of cycle networks. “A lot of money in 75 London is being spent on creating cycle lanes but it’s unnecessary and they sometimes cause more problems than they solve. Cycle lanes give a false impression that cyclists shouldn't be on the road."

80 He also rejects the use of safety gear. "Some people see cycling as a dangerous sport. It's not," he claims. "It's a simple, inexpensive way to get around. All you need is a bike. We say 85 you don't need a helmet or anything else. If you wear a suit, cycle to work in a suit."

Bamford works long hours and will often stay late at the office. He doesn't 90 mind doing it, because he believes in the promotion of cycling. He says more of us should abandon the car and public transport. "Companies are going to have to produce a green transport 95 plan and there are likely to be discouragements for workplace parking and tax reductions for employees cycling to work.

100 "Employees who cycle regularly are known to be more punctual and take less time off sick. It is in an employer's interest to promote cycling among staff." More Londoners, he hopes, will take a lead from the Dutch.
105 "In Holland everyone cycles. It's the sheer number of cyclists that make cycling safe and pleasant for everyone. If more people cycled, London would be more pleasant, safer, cleaner and 110 less stressful."

MINI LEGEND

By Pete Samson

THERE may not be much of it, but the miniskirt has been voted our favourite fashion item ever. It beat more modern offerings, such as combats, the poncho and trainers, to top spot yesterday. Created by designer Andre Courreges and popularised by Mary Quant, the mini was a symbol of the 60s. But it has stood the test of time – as a Harvey Nichols poll of 3,500 shoppers has proved. Jeans were second, followed by the Little Black Dress. A spokesman for Harvey Nichols said: “The top three will forever be in fashion.” But the 70s cowboy boots made the worst 10 as well as the top. The top fashion crime was the shell suit.

Miss Perfect

1 "That's 80p, please." Her lovely face falls. "It's 80p? Oh no, I don't believe this. I'm still 20p short." The bus driver looks uncomfortable. She sighs. "Never mind," she says. "Then I'll have to 23." Finally the driver shuffles around a bit more and then says, "Oh well, 20p won't break the bank. Go on, love," he says cheerily. "In you go."

2 Typical, I think. I almost grunt it out loud. Only Jenny Salter would manage to get a bus driver to give her 20p off! The girl's unreal! I watch her angrily as she walks onto the crowded bus and smiles at everyone, expecting them to love her. They do. Within seconds, a boy has offered her his seat. She thanks him prettily – yuk, yuk – then gets chatting to the girl next to her. They both crack up at some joke... I hate her.

3 It sums up our roles in life, really. I pay full fare, get on the bus first, and end up standing with no-one to talk to. She only pays 60p, is offered a seat, and instantly makes friends. It's so 25.

4 You'd think we'd be friends. We were both new to the area at the same time and started school in the same class. Fat chance. Within days, she'd made good mates and, within weeks, she'd established herself as the most popular girl there. Girls want to be her best mate, blokes do stupid things to get her attention, and even the teachers seem to really like her. Why? She's pretty. She's clever.

She's got the grooviest clothes. The girly has it all.

5 I could probably cope with her if gran was around. Gran always made me see things in proportion. I suppose I knew gran was going to die, but I just kept refusing to believe it – I loved her so much. I couldn't let go. I must have been unbearable to live with. After her funeral, I felt I'd lost a great part of myself. Suddenly, I didn't care about school or homework or friends. I didn't bother about anyone – and then no-one bothered about me.

6 "Liza?" I turn round to see ... Jenny. The girl she was talking to has left at the last stop so the seat next to her is free. She pats it. "Do you want to sit down?" Torn, I shake my head. It's tempting. But Jenny ... "No thanks," I grunt. "Please." Her eyes beg me. "I can see you're upset." How does she know that? Then I realise that I have tears in my eyes. Just thinking about gran does that to me.

7 Awkwardly, I sit next to her. "It's about your granny, isn't it?" she asks me gently, one hand on my arm. I nod, not trusting myself to speak. "I heard at school. I'm sorry, Liza."

8 I'm starting to 29 now and hating myself for it, but it's awful – I can't seem to stop. I've tried so hard not to let my grief show to anyone else that I've just made it worse. "I miss her so much," I gasp, hot tears streaming down my cheeks.

9 Before I know what's happening, Jenny has her arms around me and is giving me a big hug. "I wish there was something I could say to make you feel better," she says. "But ... but, it will get easier. You can't imagine it now, but it will. One day you'll look back and remember your gran without feeling the pain. I promise."

10 "What do you know about it?"
I mutter, though I'm not really hostile. For what she's said has somehow comforted me a little bit already. "Your life is so perfect."

11 To my surprise, I see my tears mirrored in her eyes. "I do know about it." She gives a trembly smile, hugs me tighter, then bites her lip. "My dad died last December."

12 "Oh ... Jenny, I'm so sorry, I didn't know ..." But suddenly I understand: her way of coping with grief is to sparkle and be popular, mine is to hide and hate.

13 At that moment, I know we'll be good friends and that what we share can bring us closer. More than that, I know why so many people like Jenny Salter. It isn't because she's pretty. Or clever. Or brilliantly dressed. It's because she's a really nice person.

*Diana,
Princess of Wales,
Memorial Tartan*

Designed in the Scottish Borders by the world-renowned Lochcarron of Scotland, this beautiful tartan reflects the life and work of the Princess of Wales. Based on the set of the Royal Stewart tartan, the background colour is a shade of blue she often wore and the over-check in red signifies the Red Cross and AIDS charities to which she lent her support. It is being produced in a limited range of woven accessories in order to raise money for the Diana, Princess of Wales, Memorial Trust which, in turn, helps all of Diana's favourite causes.

Miracle Model

Film star Milla Jovovich might not be here today – if she hadn't been kidnapped by her mum!

Stunning actress, singer and supermodel Milla Jovovich was just a toddler when she went to hospital suffering from a mysterious fever. With her condition getting worse, and doctors unable to diagnose or treat her, Milla's desperate mother snatched her from her bed.

The drama unfolded when two-year-old Milla was living with her family in the Ukraine in the former Soviet Union. Her mother, Galina Loginova recalls: "Milla was taken to hospital with a fever and a cold. I think it was in this hospital where she caught meningitis.¹⁾ Conditions were crazy. Milla grew worse, but the staff wouldn't recognise the fact. She didn't move. I thought I was going to lose her.

I wanted to take Milla to a clinic which specialised in children, where I trusted the doctors, so I asked some friends to come with their car. The hospital said they wouldn't release Milla, so I took her without their consent. At the clinic they did a spinal tap. The doctors said her condition was very bad. They diagnosed meningitis and saved her life with minutes to spare. It was a medical miracle," reveals Galina. "Milla had turned into a vegetable, but suddenly she opened her eyes. She asked for something to eat."

Proud mum Galina always knew her daughter's name would one day be up in lights. "Milla could act as soon as she could speak," she says. "She was always performing. At Russian parties, the children entertain the grown-ups.

Milla always chose to sing – sometimes doing Madonna and Michael Jackson hits." So in the 1980s, Galina took her daughter to the bright lights of Los Angeles. The beauty was just 11 when she became a model. At 12 she could earn £2,000 a day and was featured on the covers of Time, Vogue and Newsweek magazines. In 1991, at the age of 15, she starred in the movie 'Return to the Blue Lagoon'.

Other roles followed before she moved to London and spent three years away from modelling and acting. "I wanted to keep Milla away from all the people who were hanging around," says Galina. "These people, when they're not busy making movies, start to go to clubs and do stupid things like booze and drugs. I didn't want Milla to get involved. Thank God she was only a little bit affected by that."

After returning to Los Angeles, the Russian beauty starred in movies like 'The Fifth Element', 'The Story of Joan of Arc' and 'Resident Evil'. Milla is very grateful for everything her mother did for her. She says: "Mom wants me to have all the things she wanted herself. There's nothing I like more than to see her proud and happy."

Hair today, no marks tomorrow

Singapore schools have barred some students from collecting their exam results, because they have broken school rules, headmistress Mary Bay said.

About a dozen male students – some of whom have already finished education – were forbidden to enter Hong Kah Secondary School to pick up their O-level grades because they had long or dyed hair, both of which are banned under the state school rules.

"It's all about self-discipline and it's the same practice as in any other school," Ms Bay added.

Students at Ms Bay's school were told they would only receive their exam results once they had cut their hair. Some complied, but others remained defiant.

"No way will I cut my hair or colour it back again," said student Muhd Hilmi, "That's the way my hair was before the exams and I don't see any reason why I should change it now."

Wedding wasn't as planned

Jessie Hunt, 31-year-old bride-to-be from Bournemouth, ditched her fiancé and is going to marry their wedding planner. Jessie fell for Michael Phillips as she argued with her lover Matthew Jackson about what sort of wedding to have. She said: "I told him that I wanted a big full-on wedding, but he wanted a very small one."

A friend suggested that Michael could sort things out for them but Jessie said: "The more Matthew and I tried to sort things out, the further we drifted apart." On the big day Jessie called the wedding off. But she and Michael met again - and he ended up proposing.
